Strawberries picked from your own garden may not need washing, and some say never wash them, but that is extremely dangerous, knowing as we do the many hands they have passed through and the long distance and clouds of dust through which they usually travel. The proper way to wash them is to have a pan of water and put in a few berries at a time, rinsing each slightly as it is taken up to remove the hull. The berries will float and the sand will settle to the bottom of the pan, and as the hull is not removed until the berry is lifted from the water, no juice is lost. A gentle shake will remove all the water.

the average woman is better dressed now than formerly. Here and there one finds an old photograph dated 1850, '60, '70 or '80, which shows the presentment of a woman who looked thordecidedly left in the cold for some oughly well dressed and well groomed the last century. It is certainly true you know that the average of good dressing is The sket that the average of good dressing is higher.

Probably every succeeding generation has said the same. We all like to flatter ourselves, and it is a harmless enough pastime and may lead to good results if it inspires us to be still more careful in choosing our clothes and in putting them on after they are chosen. Half of the effect is in the wearing. It is said with truth that an American woman puts on her hat, while a Frenchwoman "poses" hers. The faculty of wearing clothes well is a gift of the gods, and a wonderful economy and time saver as well.

There are many reasons, of course, why good dressing should be more general than it used to be. Ferhaps that has taken place in the last ten years. Not only have materials, cut and finishing changed for the better, but we have far better value for the money. The encouraging sign is the improvement in the less expensive wares. Shoddiness and skimping of material are fast disappearing, stitching and finishing are growing more and more careful. A cheap blouse or skirt is not necessarily the badly made, but an edition of a better model in less expensive but thoroughly reliable materials.

Put all the fruit together and sugar it liberally, then put it away on the ice; when ready to serve, put on the liquor used. If this saiad is served in a glass bowl, and the red orange slices are left whole, the effect will be very ornamental.

Orange, romaine, lettuce, green peppers and chives are the ingredients of this refreshing dish. Choose young and delicate lettuce, strip the leaves, and the midsummer fashions. Covering the way, and then way and the bown the coast—then the way and the sanions.

Interesting Hoslery.

Season with olive oil, and salt, and if almost any kind of fresh fruit can be used as an appetizer. Watermelon cut in cubes and served sprinkled with a very little sugar and lemon juice, ioe cold, in grapefruit glasses, is one good appetizer. Another is cherries, dipped in lemon juice, pitted, chilled and sprinkled with a user little shaved local and sprinkled with sugar. These should be piled in glasses with a little shaved local and a spring of mint. Strawberries on the hull arranged neatily on plates urgar are always welcome.

Fichus Much Worn.

There is a wide adoption of the fichu. It is in some cases attached to the blouse and sometimes separate, to be used on any waist. As a rule it is made of white dimity or white lice, and some are made of dark or flowered silk for wear with a dark blouse. A pretty fichu of white organdy is gathered into the neok in the back and to a point in front by means of smocking at the cuffs. and white checks may come to rival the black and white varieties.

Perhaps the vogue of the tussahs and pongees is responsible for the revival of brown, by old association. A generation ago almost every pongee gown was trimmed with brown velveteen or velvet. That was a good example of the stuffy sort of things that they did to clothes in those days. Women seem to have delighted in such atrocities as pleated velvet and masses of draped and gathered cloth. It does not do to pride ourselves prematurely upon our superiority, however, for we never know in these days what the morrow may have in store for us.

The braid is used in an unusual way in the girdle at either side, allowing a view of the black taffeta crown and forming a sort of little cranny for the quills of black taffeta that trim the sides. These are knotted at the base, with the wing part wired visibly. The one on the left stands more erect than the other, but must not look too stiff. They can be faced with white if desired, as many of the ribbon trimmings are, or kept all black, according to requirements.

LARGE WARDROBE IN LITTLE SPACE

When one travels, baggage is trouplesome convenience, especially when one travels from place to place, as one does in Europe or as thousands of perons are doing in this country this summer. It is an easy matter to send any number of bags and boxes and trunks from one's home to the home of a friend or to a summer home, even if that be hundreds of miles away. For these things can be intrusted to the expressman and left in his care until they reach their destination. But suppose one is going across country, stopping at all the points of interest on the way, and then wandering up and down the coast—then the through express idea is impracticable and the true troubles of traveling come to the surface.

A black taffeta or satin coat, that comes at least to the hips, would be a wise choice for the traveler. For it can be worn in the afternoon and in the evening. A black taffeta frock, with a bodice of chiffon and lace, could serve, with the black taffeta frock, either for formal afternoon or informal evening wear, for restaurant, theater and other things.

Some women, who travel purely as tourists, need only evening frocks for theater and hotel wear, and for them an elaborate afternoon frock answers all purposes. If such a traveler meets a friend unexpectedly who lives in a city visited and invitations of a private nature result, she can usually buy a frock at short notice.
